I received your letter so outrageously long ago (April 18 to be exact), that it is not even proper to attempt to apologize for my tardiness in responding. By way of explanation, if not justification, for this delay, let me say that the reorganization which I discussed with you when you were in town has proceeded even more slowly than predicted. The result has been that we simply have not had any hiring authority nor a crystal clear picture of precisely the type of professional staff we would require. Now at last however we seem to have a pretty clear idea of the road ahead, and the purpose of this note is to ask (a) whether your interest in employment continues as you described it to us, and (b) whether there has been any change in your current work that we should add to our file.

Since my own assignment will be changing shortly, may I request that you send your reply to [REDACTED],

We look forward to hearing from you, and once again let me express my regrets for the long hiatus.

Sincerely,
